Research Methods in Applied Linguistics (RMAL) series

Series Editor: Rosa M. Manchón (manchon@um.es)

Guidelines for Book Proposals

General considerations

For over forty years John Benjamins has been serving the international academic community by producing high quality research materials. As publishers we are fully independent, flexible, with short lines of communication.

These guidelines are for authors/editors of manuscripts submitted for publication with John Benjamins. A prospectus prepared along these lines will help us to assess your proposal in terms of intended readership, the market, and suitability in our publishing program. In order to guarantee the quality of our publications, proposed manuscripts are subject to peer reviewing and a decision on publication will be based on referee reports, series editors assessments, and market expectations. When your proposal is under review, we consider that, in line with professional standards, you are granting John Benjamins the first right of choice for publication. The reviewing process is aimed at providing constructive comments. All information supplied will be confidential and only for internal use.

Preparing your proposal for the RMAL series

I. About the book

I.1. The manuscript in question

- Author(s)/Editor(s) name(s)
- Title (tentative)
- Estimated length (in number of words and pages)
- Number of tables.
- Number of figures and/or plates. If any of the figures crucially need color, please indicate this. (Please note that we may charge for the use of color)
- Number of contributions (for collective volumes only)
- Other special features; such as, for instance, accompanying audio, video, or datasets. Please indicate the number, type, and size of such files
- Time schedule

I.2. Outline of the book

It is important for the evaluation process and later for promotional purposes to know the exact nature of your book. For this reason we would like you to focus on the following aspects related to the outline of your book:

- What type of book it is: research monograph or edited collection
- What do you see as the main selling points? Emphasize the unique aspects regarding the way in which this book advances methodological knowledge/techniques/… in Applied Linguistics, in general, and in the research domain covered in the book, in particular.
- Please send a copy of the table of contents and a concise description of the volume.
- Please indicate the intended readership of your book.
- List any publications your manuscript is related to or will directly compete with. Please include author(s)/editor(s), year of publication, title, publisher, and price if known.

I.3. Possible reviewers of your manuscript

Please list up to three professionals in your field (with their full contact details, please) who are qualified to objectively read and evaluate your manuscript. We may or may not approach the suggested reviewers as we may be using our own network of reviewers, or those suggested by the RMAL editorial team.

II. About the authors(s)/editor(s)

II.1. Motivation, suitability, and qualifications

- Please explain your motivation and particular qualifications to write/edit the work.
- Please include your degrees, former academic affiliations, etc., or attach your cv.
- Please list titles, publishers, and publication dates of any previous books, journal articles, or presentations you have (co-)authored or (co-)edited that do not appear in your cv.
- Please list your fields of academic interest

II.2. Professional data

Full name

Academic status

Academic affiliation

ORCID (if available)

II.3. Contact details

A. University address

City &Postal/Zip code

Country

Phone/Fax

E-mail

III. Submission instructions

Please submit your book proposal as attachments by e-mail, either directly to the RMAL Series Editor (Rosa M. Manchón, manchon@um.es) or to acquisition editor Kees Vaes (kees.vaes@benjamins.nl). Please label attachments clearly with the name of the author(s)/editor(s), rather than "benjamins-proposal", which would not distinguish them from other proposals at our end.

On the basis of the book proposal, and after consultation with our RMAL Series Editor and the RMAL Editorial Board, we will determine whether the proposed book would fit our program, and, if so, ask you to submit the full manuscript for reviewing. Should your manuscript be accepted for publication we will get in touch concerning contractual matters, submission guidelines and a further marketing questionnaire.

We look forward to receiving your proposal.
