1.2 Outline

1.2.1 Rationale

In this co-authored research monograph, we will equip researchers with state-of-the-art knowledge and methods in quantitative data analysis and reporting, emphasizing open science principles related to transparent and reproducible data practices. Quantitative methods are continually evolving, enabling researchers to address and shed new light on perennial questions using novel techniques and to use such techniques to ask new questions altogether. Alongside the evolving quantitative landscape, research designs are growing more complex in a number of ways: advances in data storage and processing are allowing researchers to collect larger, hierarchically clustered data sets that demand more analytical machinery and researchers are asking more sophisticated questions that sit at the intersection of multiple research domains. Both these facts mean that there are usually many different analytical strategies researchers can pursue, each of which could lead to different conclusions regarding what the data suggest. Furthermore, there is now widespread conversation about how to make the decision-making process itself as transparent as possible, so that future researchers may replicate and improve upon it. In some instances, multiple research teams or even a single researcher may apply several analytical approaches to the same data set, on the view that if multiple analyses lead to the same result, then that result can be considered more credible. Contemporary conversations related to questionable research practices, which can arise at any stage of the research, are also ongoing.

Set against this backdrop, we aim to educate researchers on how to undertake methodologically sound and transparent quantitative research from start to finish, thinking not just about the research itself but also about the research tools and protocols that provide the scaffolding needed for open science. A fundamental motivation for this manuscript stems from the fact that engaging in open science practices is becoming the new norm in linguistic research. More and more journals are requiring that authors make available their research materials, including data, code, and stimuli, to publish original research. Crucially, researchers are expected to adhere to open, transparent practices, but typically receive little, if any, training in this burgeoning area. The goal of this manuscript is to serve as a guide for researchers at all levels through the process of preparing, sharing, and maintaining reproducible research projects.

We envision a four-part volume with a short concluding chapter. In the first section, we address all aspects of quantitative research, focusing on the quantitative design principles that have been the bedrock of applied linguistics research, while also looking to the future and commenting on the designs that are likely to reshape the state of the art. Into that section, we infuse discussion of some of the debates that are currently redefining the field, including sampling practices, online data collection, and the need for transparent, reproducible reporting via literate programming. The second section focuses on the act of conducting reproducible quantitative research. In this section, we describe and showcase the various cutting-edge tools at our disposal and how they can be integrated into a transparent workflow that results in reproducible research. In the third section, we delve into research integrity, tapping into discussions related to questionable research practices and how we can take steps to mitigate them during design, implementation and analysis, and reporting. In the fourth section, we focus on ethics, which has been framed predominantly in terms of institutional review and oversights, including consent. We take a broader approach, addressing ethics in publication and the uptake of scientific knowledge. Throughout the book, drawing upon the information presented in the second section, we introduce researchers to GitHub and R as organizational frameworks for making research more systematic, reproducible, and open. Concretely, we advocate for literate programming using cutting edge tools, such as Quarto markdown documents (.qmd files). Quarto is an open-source, scientific and technical publishing system that provides numerous advantages for conducting open, transparent, reproducible research. To highlight just one, it allows the researcher to integrate prose together with code from any number of programming languages into a single, shareable document. We provide helpful suggestions and tutorials designed to get researchers comfortable using these tools as quickly as possible. In doing so, we offer models that have worked well for us and others, while creating opportunities for readers to reflect upon their own process and tailor their approach to their specific needs. We touch upon the potential of these tools to make data more accessible to the public, such as through interactive data visualization, Shiny apps, and so on.

There are many books that have addressed quantitative research methods and quantitative data analysis, including tutorial books that simultaneously train researchers in software such as R (e.g., Winter, 2019). What sets our book apart is its emphasis on helping researchers design sustainable research models and workflows that will not only make their work more rigorous but also more transparent and open. To the best of our knowledge, there has yet to be a monograph that has combined instruction in quantitative methods with practical guidance on how to build an open science practice from the start. It is an ideal time for this volume because open science is still in its adolescence in applied linguistics, which means that guidance for exactly how to make applied linguistics research maximally accessible, transparent, and reproducible is lacking. Certainly, researchers can look to neighboring disciplines, but we need field-specific standards, especially in the area of quantitative data analysis and reporting.

1.2.2 Proposed table of contents

1. Overview of Quantitative Methods
    1.1. Key elements of a quantitative study
    1.2. Main designs in quantitative research
    1.3. Main data analysis procedures in quantitative research

    1.4. Methodological rigor in quantitative research
        1.4.1. Participant selection
        1.4.2. Data collection procedures
        1.4.3. Data analysis procedures
        1.4.4. Reporting practices
    1.5. Critical quantitative research
2. Reproducible Quantitative Research
    2.1. Introduction to open science practices in quantitative research
    2.2. Tools and workflows
    2.3. Reproducible data analysis
3. Integrity in Quantitative Research
    3.1. Introduction to research integrity
    3.2. What are questionable research practices in quantitative research
    3.3. What constitutes research misconduct in quantitative research
4. Ethics in Quantitative Research
    4.1. Study design and implementation
    4.2. Authorship
    4.3. Publication
    4.4. Societal impact
5. Conclusion

1.2.3 Intended readership

We envision this book being useful to quantitative researchers at all stages of their careers working in diverse areas of applied linguistics. New and junior researchers will profit from a detailed exposition of quantitative methods and the research tools that can help them organize and share their quantitative projects. By reflecting on a variety of high-impact research topics in the quantitative sciences, more experienced researchers will have the opportunity to reappraise their research values and beliefs. They will also benefit from a systematic introduction to tools that can support open quantitative research, which we believe will help mitigate often cited technical 'barriers to entry'. Practically speaking, we believe that this book can be used independently or in conjunction with other research materials in applied linguistics methods courses. Likewise, we aim to write it in such a way that sections and chapters are interconnected but can also be read as standalone units.

1.2.4 Potential competitors

Books dealing with data analysis

Larson-Hall, J. (2015). A guide to doing statistics in second language research using SPSS and R (2nd edition). Routledge.

Plonsky, L. (2015). Advancing quantitative methods in second language research. Routledge.

Winter, B. (2019). Statistics for linguists: An introduction using R. Routledge.

> Note: Larson-Hall (2015), Plonsky (2015), and Winter (2019) deal with quantitative data analysis and statistics. Winter (2019) has a minor emphasis on open science, but the primary focus of the book is on regression analysis in R. Our book will be focused on open science practices in quantitative research, with commentary on statistical methods. Part of the goal of our book is to help researchers rethink how they go about their research rather than what they do for a particular study.

Hui, B., & Pandža, N. (forthcoming). The open handbook of quantitative data analysis in applied linguistics (Part 1): From data dances to regression revelry. Applied Linguistics Press.

Hui, B., & Pandža, N. (forthcoming). The open handbook of quantitative data analysis in applied linguistics (Part 2): From R script to manuscript. Applied Linguistics Press.

Note: Both of these volumes are likely to touch upon the same topics that we aim to address in this book. One way our book will standout and complement (as opposed to compete with) these volumes is our emphasis on making research programs transparent and reproducible by cultivating a set of practices that can inform an open science research architecture.

Other quantitative books

Wood, M., Larsson, T., Plonsky, L., Sterling, S., Kytö, M., & Yaw, K. (2024). Addressing questionable research practices in applied linguistics: A practical guide. Applied Linguistics Press.

Note: This book emphasizes one aspect of quantitative research: QRPs. In our book, we will discuss QRPs, but we will take a more global approach to discussing how researchers can set up workflows and build practices that create the necessary architecture for high-impact, transparent quantitative research.

Books on specific techniques and subdomains

There are many volumes that address specific methods or methods in particular subdomains of linguistics (notably those published by Routledge under the Second Language Acquisition Research Series; see the selection below). We do not view these volumes as direct competitors because they are meant to be used for specific purposes.

Colantoni, L., Steele, J., & Escudero, P. (2015). Second language speech. Cambridge University Press.

Darcy, I. (2024). Second language speech processing: A guide to conducting experimental research. Routledge

Godfroid, A. (2019). Eye tracking in second language acquisition and bilingualism: A research synthesis and methodological guide. Routledge

Nagle, C. (2024). A guide to quantitative research methods in second language pronunciation. Routledge.

Porte, G., & McManus, K. (2019). Doing replication research in applied linguistics. Routledge.

2 About the authors

2.1 Motivation, suitability, and qualifications

We are motivated to write this book because we believe researchers lack comprehensive training in open science practices for quantitative research. Such training is necessary because research methods are becoming more complex: individuals are increasingly participating in larger, multi-site studies, and the analytical techniques they apply to such data are (necessarily) more sophisticated. Thus, there is a growing garden of forking paths, and the field has yet to put forth a comprehensive guide on how to ensure high-impact, ethical, and transparent quantitative research in applied linguistics. As two individuals who are committed to the principles of open science, we feel that we would have benefitted from training in the area, and through our own work, we have cultivated a set of principles and practices that can serve as a flexible blueprint for other researchers.

We are qualified because we are experts in quantitative analysis who routinely use modern statistical techniques (mixed-effects modeling, Bayesian analysis, etc.) in our work, and whenever possible we publish our data and code, putting considerable time and effort into annotating analyses for the purpose of interpretability and reproducibility. We have both given talks and workshops on topics such as data analysis, data visualization, and open science, and we have contributed to fieldwide initiatives in the area (below we list for each of us a couple of relevant and noteworthy research activities/accomplishments; CVs enclosed).

3. Teaching

- Graduate student mentorship and supervision
  - PhD supervision (UT Austin): Teresa Blumenthal, Shelby Bruun, Connor Stevenson, Declan Revenew
  - PhD committee membership: Taichi Yamashita (Iowa State University, ’21), Ivana Rehman (Iowa State University, ’21), Alif Silpachai (Iowa State University, ’21), Idée Edalatishams (Iowa State University, ’21), Kim Jensen (University of Murcia, ’21), Timothy Kochem (Iowa State University, ’22), Linxi Zhang (Georgetown University, ’23), Mutleb Alnafisah (Iowa State University, ’24), Zoë Zawadzki (Iowa State University, ’24), Erik Goodale (Iowa State University, in progress), Mahdi Duris (Iowa State University, in progress), Ash Carter (UT Austin, in progress), Matthew Docherty (UT Austin, in progress), Irene Arias Quintero (UT Austin, in progress)
- Undergraduate student mentorship and supervision
  - Honors theses and capstone projects: Zoey McEvoy (Iowa State University, ’23), Zulyka Medrano (UT Austin, ’24), Dana Sola (UT Austin, ’25)
  - NSF Research Experience for Undergraduates: Nyamal Toang (Iowa State), Brian Henschel (UT Austin), Paulina Martínez (UT Austin), Emma Milton (UT Austin)
  - UT Austin Undergraduate Research Assistantship Program: “The College of Liberal Arts Undergraduate Research Apprenticeship Program (URAP) provides a structured opportunity for students to be exposed to and learn about research and exploration in the many different disciplines within Liberal Arts. It involves both training and active involvement in research projects under the mentorship of faculty and is intended to prepare students for their own independent research activities prior to graduation.” (For more information, see UT CoLA URAP Website)

Science of Language Learning Fall '23: Macy Acuna-Taylor, Riya Anand, Ashleigh Broom, Zofia Graham, Layla Pholsiri, Apollo Reyes; Graduate Assistant: Shelby Bruun

Science of Language Learning Fall '24: Gordon Feng, Martín Gómez León, Crystal Lerner, Celeste Molina, Emily Pearce, Wenqi Peng; Graduate Assistants: Shelby Bruun, Declan Revenew

- Courses taught
  - Undergraduate: All levels of Spanish language and culture; Introduction to Language and Linguistics in Society, Spanish Phonetics and Phonology, Linguistics and the Spanish Learner, Bilingualism in the Spanish-Speaking World, Applied Acoustic Phonetics
  - Graduate: Quantitative Research Methods and Data Analysis for Linguists (emphasis on R); Instructed Second Language Acquisition; Technology and Oral Language

Research Experience

2018 – present Principle Investigator, Rutgers Applied Phonetics Group:
Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ

2020 – present Collaborator, ManyBabies (MB-AtHome)
Online Infant Data Collection

2016 – present Member, Bilingualism and Second Language Acquisition Group
Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ

2016 – 2019 Affiliated member, Phonology and Field Research lab
Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ

2015 – present Co-Principle Investigator, Program Articulation and Language Acquisition Research (PArLAR)
Middlebury College, Middlebury, VT

2011 – 2016 Research Assistant, Arizona Applied Phonetics Laboratory
University of Arizona, Tucson, AZ, Lab director: Dr. Miquel Simonet

Spring 2012 Research Assistant, Spanish Heritage Language Program
University of Arizona. Tucson, AZ, Director: Dr. Sara Beaudrie

Fall 2011 Assistant to the Director, Spanish Heritage Language Program
University of Arizona, Tucson, AZ, Director: Dr. Sara Beaudrie

2010 Phonetics Lab Assistant, Spanish High Council of Scientific Investigation (CSIC)
Center of Social and Human Sciences, Madrid, Spain, Director: María Juana Gil Fernández

Academic Accolades

Grants and Scholarships

2022 – 2023 Humanities Plus Grant,
Awarded $2,000.00 developing new pedagogical methodologies and initiatives for Linguistic discrimnation in the US course
Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ

2019 Open and Affordable Textbooks Program grant,
Awarded $1,000.00 to develop open access educational materials for Intro to Spanish Phonetics
Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ

2019 Language Engagement Project: 991 Challenge Course Grant,
Awarded $1,000.00 to develop a 1-credit module entitled Data Science in Spanish
Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ

2008 – 2016 Comanche Nation Department of Higher Education Scholarship

2015 Karen Smith Endowment Scholarship
University of Arizona, Tucson, AZ

2015 Graduate and Professional Student Council Research and Project Grant,
Awarded $1,666.00 for professional recording equipment
University of Arizona, Tucson, AZ

2014 Graduate and Professional Student Council Travel Grant,
Awarded for travel to the Hispanic Linguistics Symposium (HLS)
University of Arizona, Tucson, AZ

2014 Second Language Acquisition and Teaching Travel Grant,
Awarded for travel to the Hispanic Linguistics Symposium (HLS)
University of Arizona, Tucson, AZ

2013 Second Language Acquisition and Teaching Travel Grant,
Awarded for travel to the Second Language Research Forum (SLRF)
University of Arizona, Tucson, AZ

2009 Betty Jones Scholarship, $7,260.00
School of French, Middlebury College

2006 – 2008 North American Language and Culture Scholarship
Spanish Ministry of Education and Science

2004 – 2006 Eunice D. Faber Scholarship
Western Washington University, Bellingham, WA

Awards and Honors

2022 – 2023 Institute for the Study of Global Racial Justice Early Career Faculty Fellow
Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ

2021 – 2022 Presidential Fellowship for Teaching Excellence Award ($1,000.00)
Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ

2015 College of Humanities Fellowship
University of Arizona, Tucson, AZ

2013 College of Humanities Fellowship
University of Arizona, Tucson, AZ

2010 – 2011 College of Humanities Fellowship
University of Arizona, Tucson, AZ

2010 – 2011 Graduate College Fellowship
University of Arizona, Tucson, AZ

2009 Outstanding Graduate Student, Middlebury College, Middlebury, VT

2006 Outstanding Graduating Senior Nominee, Western Washington University, Bellingham, WA, Department of Psychology

2006 Outstanding Graduating Senior Nominee, Western Washington University, Bellingham, WA, Department of Modern and Classical Languages

Teaching Experience

2016 – present Associate Professor, Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ

Undergraduate:

Spanish Culture and Composition for Heritage Learners

Introduction to the Study of Language

Introduction to Spanish Phonetics/Phonology

Current Issues in Second Language Acquisition

Languages and Cultures Across the Curriculum: Data Science in Spanish

Data Visualization of the Social Sciences

Linguistic discrimination in the United States

Graduate:

Phonetics and Phonology of Bilingualism

Data Science for Linguists

Research Methods: Open Science and Reproducible Research in Linguistics

Spanish Phonetics for Teachers

2014 – present Instructor, Middlebury College, Middlebury, VT

Courses taught (in Spanish):

High Beginner Spanish in Context

Spanish Pronunciation Clinic for Beginners

2010 – 2016 Graduate Associate in Teaching, University of Arizona, Tucson, AZ

Courses taught (in Spanish):

Elementary 1st semester Spanish

Elementary 2nd semester Spanish

Intermediate 5th semester Spanish

Introduction to Spanish Phonetics

Spanish Phonetics for the Heritage Speaker

Introduction to Hispanic Linguistics

History of the Spanish Language

Applied Linguistics

Fall 2015 Instructor, Franklin Institute, University of Alcalá, Alcalá de Henares, Spain

Course taught (in Spanish):

Phonetics and oral Spanish

2009 – 2010 English Teacher, C.E.I.P Carmen Iglesias, Madrid, Spain

Courses taught (in English):

Kindergarten English

3rd grade English

2006 – 2008 Teaching Assistant, Escuela Oficial de Idiomas, Cádiz, Spain

Courses taught (in English):
